foreign born population doubled in size between 2000 and 2010 nearly half of african immigrants are naturalized u s citizens and seven in ten immigrants from africa constitute a highly diverse and rapidly growing group in the united states as census data demonstrate the african population has increased dramatically in recent years. according to the united states census bureau, the black population has grown by over 30% from 1990 to 2010, and the increase in the black population has been driven largely by immigration. in fact, the number of immigrants of african ancestry in the united states has more than doubled since 2000, from 1.9 million to 4.4 million. this growth has been concentrated in certain areas of the country, particularly in the southeast and the northeast. for example, the state of florida has seen a significant increase in the number of african immigrants, with over 600,000 black immigrants living there in 2010, up from just under 300,000 in 1990. similarly, the state of new york has seen a large increase in the number of black immigrants, with over 500,000 black immigrants living there in 2010, up from just under 250,000 in 1990. this growth has been driven by a combination of factors, including the attraction of employment opportunities, educational institutions, and cultural and social ties to the african diaspora.

immigrants from africa are diverse and come from a wide range of countries, with the top five countries of origin being nigeria, south africa, senegal, ghana, and ethiopia. these immigrants are also highly educated, with a significant proportion having completed university studies. in fact, the average educational attainment of immigrants from africa is higher than that of the overall foreign born population.

this is due in part to the high levels of education in many african countries, as well as the fact that many african immigrants are economic migrants who choose to come to the united states in order to pursue higher education and career opportunities.

the african immigrant population is also young, with a median age of 30.2 years compared to 41.4 years for the overall foreign born population.

this youthful demographic is expected to continue to grow as more young africans come to the united states to pursue education and employment opportunities. this growth has implications for the labor market, as african immigrants are likely to enter the workforce in large numbers in the coming years, potentially putting pressure on wages and other economic indicators.

overall, the african immigrant population is a diverse and rapidly growing group in the united states, and is expected to continue to grow in the coming years. this growth is expected to have implications for a variety of social and economic indicators, including the labor market, education systems, and public services.
