In 2022, a jury found Oath Keepers founder Stewart Rhodes guilty of seditious conspiracy for his role in the Capitol riot that occurred as Congress was certifying now-President Joe Biden's win over then-President Donald Trump. His trial was held in the District of Columbia. The case was heard by Judge T. S. Ellis III, who was appointed by President George W. Bush. The jury found Rhodes guilty on all counts.

The trial was notable for its high profile, with President Trump threatening to out confidential sources from Russia. The FBI had at least eight informants embedded with Proud Boys. The trial was also notable for the revelation of John Connolly, a former FBI handler, indicating that the FBI had a double life as a forensics expert and blood spatter analyst employed by the Miami Metro Police Department.

The trial was watched by a television audience of millions, with many people following along on social media and other outlets. The case was one of the most significant and high-profile cases in recent years, with implications for the future of investigative journalism and the role of the media in a democracy.

The trial was held in the District of Columbia, and the jury found Rhodes guilty of all charges. The decision was widely anticipated, given the high profile of the case and the political implications.
